As the commercialisation of sports continues to flourish, opportunities for good quality sports lawyers will also grow.

SHEA WILLIAM

The sports industry is growing strong strength across the world, involving in India. Sports revenue the global sport sector is worth between $667.6 billion. The commercialisation of sports has created a new world of opportunities — not just for athletes and professional sportspersons.

An aspect of the growth of sports as an industry, there has been an increased recognition of the need to provide for the commercialisation of sports across different sectors. Sports lawyers are in such a position. An increasing number of students are choosing the sports-related industry as an option for their future career. Many students are interested in the sport management and sports science.

Work profile

Sports lawyers work on a range of legal issues. For instance, sports lawyers may find themselves working on legal issues such as contracts, commercial law, and intellectual property. They may also work on issues such as the regulation of sports or even constitutional law.

Opportunities

Since sports law is still in its nascent phase in India, sports lawyers are relatively few in number. The demand for sports lawyers is rising, and the availability of opportunities is increasing. This is creating a demand for professionals who can skillfully navigate the legal complexities of the sports industry.

Sponsored by the Indian Premier League (IPL), the Football League, and the Premier League, the sports law sector is thriving. The growth of sports law is creating opportunities for graduates who want to work in this emerging field. The demand for sports lawyers is expected to increase, giving graduates a chance to work in a dynamic and ever-changing sector.